

Idioms

We all agreed that the situation was a blessing in disguise.

Her knock-knock joke was just a drop in the bucket compared to the funny stories she told later.

Actions speak louder than words so you should always make good choices around small children.

We were ready to travel to Florida at the drop of a hat!

I was disappointed by his decision once again, but my mom told me that leopards don't change their spots.

The bully at school was all bark and no bite so I wasn't really afraid.

We were as high as a kite when we found out we were going to Disney World!

My coach said that they other team found the chink in our armor and that is why they won the game.

She had teased him for so long that it was time she got a taste of her own medicine.

They were up against the clock and had to get the project turned in by Friday.

My dad tried to teach me how to change the oil in my car, but it was all Greek to me.

Our leader told us several times that we were all in the same boat and should start working together better.

My grandfather always told me that I was the apple of his eye.

Getting an A on my math test was a piece of cake because I studied so hard.

My aunt told me not to add fuel to the fire by teasing the toddler who was already screaming.

We all agreed that we needed to have a meeting of the minds in order to solve the problem.

My brother was interested in trading all the baseball cards because they were a dime a dozen.

